DOJO TECHNOLOGY SUPPORTS THE FOOD FRENZY 'JUST FOR THE FUN OF IT'

Dojo Technology, a Bremerton-based high-tech company serving clients throughout the world, is proud to announce its sponsorship of Food Lifeline's Food Frenzy campaign.

"This is a great opportunity for Dojo to get involved in a fun event which has a great impact here at home in Kitsap County," says Dojo's Director of Operations Ed Hamilton. The Food Frenzy campaign is just one way that Food Lifeline, a nonprofit organization located in Seattle, helps supply local food banks throughout Washington State with much needed food.

Ken Shelton, co-owner of Dojo Technology, sees the benefit of supporting such a good program. "With over 14,000 at-need children out of school and not being supported by school meal programs here in Kitsap County, this is a good time to step in and offer our support for such a good program," Mr. Shelton said.

Food Frenzy is a friendly competition between teams from law firms, stock brokerages and accounting firms. Food Frenzy rules are simple; the organization that puts the most meals on the table for Washington's hungry children wins. From attorney dunking tanks in downtown Seattle, karaoke sing-offs, and online auctions to ice cream socials it has become a popular fixture not to mention a great way to keep the food banks full throughout the summer.

Seattle-based Food Lifeline created this charity event in 1989. Last years event raised $160,000 and 966,818 meals for needy children in Washington which was a 12% increase from the year before. This year the goal is to surpass the million meal provided mark.

Since early 2002 Dojo has been providing computer services to the legal community. Dojo assists law firms in identifying potential evidence from large volumes of computer based files.
